

COOK ISLANDS CHRISTIAN CHURCH

GUIDELINES FOR THE CONDUCT OF FAMILY BEREAVEMENT SERVICES

1. BACKGROUND

Family bereavement service is very much part of the CICC programme aimed at comforting the family (parents, siblings, immediate and extended relatives, friends of the family affected) for their loss. It is also a command that the Lord gave to his people to comfort those who are going through difficult times, including the loss of a family member.

Due to the significant differences in the way family services are conducted by the Ekalesias and members of the CICC, it is therefore intended that this guideline will make things easier for the organisation of family services, both prior to and during the actual burial ceremony.

2. ISSUES

Some issues related to the conduct of family services include the following:

- Pro-longed period of service before the deceased is put to its final resting place. In some cases, the service is conducted daily and more than once a day for up to a week, thus putting significant burden on the bereaved family.
- Different church ministers involved in the final stages of the service, i.e. in the church and at the burial ground.
- Differences within the bereaved family as to who should conduct the service, where the final resting place should be, and so on.
- Different formats with respect to the presentation of the eulogy.

This guideline addresses the above issues with the purpose of minimising the above and other issues related to the bereavement.

3. DEFINITION OF A FAMILY SERVICE

For the purpose of this paper a family service is defined as a religious gathering of family members, relatives and friends to comfort the members of a family who has lost a member; husband, wife, sister, brother, uncle, etc. There are 3 types family services conducted in the CICC;

- i. Pure Ngutuare – a short and simple service conducted at the home of the deceased, or any other residence nominated by the family.
- ii. Apare – a more elaborate service conducted at the home of the deceased, or any other residence nominated by the family. This service involves members of a congregation spending time with the family singing church songs, making speeches usually on what they know about the deceased, and offering donations to the deceased family to ease the burden and hardship on the family. This component of the family service, which is held only once, is therefore strongly encouraged.

- iii. Pure tanuanga (funeral service) which involves 3 parts: (a) short service at home prior to proceeding to church, (b) church service, and (c) burial service at the gravesite. In some instances and at the request of the family, the church service may not be conducted. The minister and Ekalesia cannot force the family to have their deceased member taken into the church, that is entirely a family decision.

4. ORGANISING THE SERVICE

Family services can be organised by a Deacon (if there is one) or senior member of the bereaved family who can talk on their behalf, in collaboration with the minister and secretary of his parish, and the tapere in-charge. They will set the details of the programme which will include the first family service, apare, service in the church, and the final burial service. Needless to say, the family will take responsibility in setting the times of the services, the required paper-works from the hospital, the final resting place of the deceased, and making the necessary public announcements. In setting the programme, it is important to note the following:

- There may be close family members residing overseas who wish to participate in the service so that sufficient time should be given to enable them to make their travel arrangements
- People normally want to make contributions to the affected family before the burial and not after, which again means if they are overseas, time for them is important as mentioned above

Once the programme is set and advertised, all parties must adhere to it. People come to the services with good intentions of showing their respect to the deceased and providing comfort to the family, and they will most likely be “turned off” if the advertised programme is not closely adhered to. For example if the time of the service in the church is 10.00am and the actual starting time is 11.30, it is likely that a significant number of will simply go home before the service begins.

5. WHO WILL CONDUCT THE SERVICE

There are certain conditions on the way official duties are carried out in the CICC parishes, including the conduct of a family service. Section 8.20 of the CICC Manual dictates that a non-CICC member from another denomination cannot carry out duties in any of the CICC branches if the following are not met:

- (a) When representatives/members from the 5 organisations below pay any of the Ekalesias a visit, it is nice to delegate some activities to them for the reason that the CICC has an official partnership arrangement with each of them:
 - (i) Maohi Protestant Church of French Polynesia
 - (ii) Uniting Church of Australia
 - (iii) Pacific Conference of Churches

- (iv) Congregational Union of New Zealand
 - (v) Presbyterian Church of Aotearoa New Zealand
- (b) Visiting lecturers to the Takamoa Theological College. They have been carefully selected prior to teaching at Takamoa, so it is nice to delegate some activities to them if they want. The parish minister will explain to the visiting ministers the programme of the family service, if the minister chooses to delegate some of his responsibilities.

In brief, family services must be conducted by the minister responsible for that parish. If he wishes to, he may share the responsibility with his ministerial colleagues from other CICC parishes and visiting ministers from the above partner churches, but not with a minister who does not satisfy conditions a & b above.

6. ORDER AND FREQUENCY OF SERVICE

6.1 At the home of the family

The order of service at the home of the affected family is as follows:

- i. MC to call the service to order at the set time (the MC is normally a member of the bereaved family. If required, the Eklesia Secretary may facilitate.)
- ii. Opening prayer
- iii. First hymn (Sunday School or traditional hymn, whichever is convenient for those in attendance)
- iv. Bible reading
- v. Message
- vi. Second hymn (optional)
- vii. Closing prayer
- viii. MC to make any necessary announcements, such as times and places for the final family and burial service if known.

The home family service is done three times; one at the beginning, the apare service, and the one on the day of the funeral prior to the main service being conducted in the church. In some cases, such as in New Zealand Australia, the final family service may be taken one day prior to the church funeral service. Between the first and last family services, no other family service should be conducted, in order to lessen the burden on the bereaved family. If so required, a Deacon may visit the bereaved family to offer comfort.

6.2 In the church

Pages 69 & 72 of the CICC Prayer Book (revised version, 2011) outline the order of service in the church for adults and infants respectively. It is important that the order is closely followed, and that the bereaved family is briefed before-hand. It is the responsibility of the Uipaanga Diakono to ensure that the church is appropriately prepared for the service, e.g. doors and windows opened, lights turned on, sound system turned on, stools in place if required, etc.

Only the minister responsible for the parish will conduct the service. In his absence, he will organise for another CICC minister to take over the responsibility.

One important aspect to be followed in the church is that, as per the Prayer Book, only one speaker is to make a speech which is normally presentation of the eulogy; too many speakers will only pro-long the service. It is important to note that in presenting the eulogy of the deceased, the focus should be on his/her involvements in the church. His general non-church background should be presented during the family services.

6.3 At the burial site

Pages 71 & 72 of the CICC Prayer Book (revised version, 2011) outlines the order of service at the burial ground for adults and infants. It is important that the order is closely followed, and that the bereaved family is briefed before-hand by the Ekalesia Secretary. It is the responsibility of the family to ensure that the burial ground is appropriately prepared for the service, e.g. grave site, furniture, over-head cover (marquees to shelter against hot and wet weather), parking areas, etc.

Only the minister responsible for the parish will conduct the service and may share the responsibility with other CICC ministers if they are present. In his absence, he will organise for another CICC minister to take over the responsibility. Any minister who does not belong to the CICC or its partner churches, will not officiate over the funeral service.

In cases where the minister is absent (sick, overseas, etc.), the nearest CICC minister should be contacted. If there is none, the responsibility goes to the Assistant Minister if there is one. Others that may be assigned the task if necessary, are the Deacons. For those Ekalesias on Rarotonga, lack of minister should not be an issue because of personnel at Takamoa (president, principal, students)

7. AFTER THE BURIAL SERVICE

Straight after the last prayer at the grave site, the MC will make the necessary announcements in respect of the arrangements for the rest of the day, such as refreshments, anyone who may wish to make presentations, etc. The MC is normally a member of the bereaved family. If required, the Secretary of the Ekalesia may facilitate.

8. LAWS OF THE STATE

It is important for those outside of the Cook Islands (i.e. New Zealand, Australia, Tahiti) that the state medical and other laws & procedures governing arrangements in respect of managing the dead and putting them to their final resting places, are closely adhered to. Failure to do so may lead to clashes with the authorities and possible court action which we all want to avoid.
